Two Small Children Found Dead in Old Icebox
St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 2 —(P)—A citywide search for two small St. Paul children ended last night when their smothered bodies were found in an ice box, stored in a neighbor's garage.

The tiny victims were Franklin Sherer, five, and two and one-half year old Sandra, a tot for whom Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Sherer, the boy's parents, were caring pending adoption by the family.

Mrs. Sherer missed the children shortly before dinner time and called police.

But it wasn't until four hours later that one of the officers found Franklin's tricycle in the garage of John Linnerooth, next door neighbor of the Sherers. The Linnerooth family had been absent since noon yesterday.

Officers opened the refrigerator to find the two curled up in separate compartments behind tightly closed doors. Fire department rescue squad members used oxygen for an hour in a vain effort to revive them.

A similar tragedy occurred earlier this year near Walnut Ridge, Ark. Three children died as a result of being trapped in an old-fashioned ice box. A playmate later said he shut the victims in the box and then forgot about them.

McMath Will Try to Keep Camp Chaffie Open

Little Rock, Sept. 2 —(P)—Governor McMath said today he will go directly to President Truman and Secretary of Defense Johnson in an effort to keep Camp Chaffie near Fort Smith open.
"There are only two men who can do anything about it," the governor told reporters.
"They are the President and the secretary of defense."
McMath said he will meet the President either at the meeting of the American Bar association in St. Louis Sunday or at the Armvets convention at Des Moines, Ia., the following day.
The joint chiefs of staff recently ordered that Camp Chaffie be closed next year.

Out-of-State Agency to Survey Roads

Little Rock, Sept. 3 —(UP)—The Arkansas Legislative council has agreed to ask an out-of-state agency to make a survey of all state and county roads and city streets.
The council, nettled by the charge that it has done nothing constructive in its five months of existence, voted 13 to 5 yesterday to ask the Automotive Safety foundation, Washington, D. C., to make the survey. The foundation will make a year-long study of highway needs in the state and will make recommendations on long range planning and methods of financing.

Highway department Engineer A. E. Johnson estimated cost of the survey at $30,000 half of which would be borne by the federal government.

The council agreed to make the request only after a few barbed remarks were thrown at Gov. Sid McMath's current bond-financed highway program.

State Senator Jerry Sereeton of Hazen, who later voted for the survey, wanted to know if the move was an attempt to shift responsibility for the bond program to the council. Then Rep. Pat Robinson of Lewisville asked if the council would be blamed if the survey should repeat McMath's recommendation that low-traffic roads be turned back to the counties.

A third lawmaker, Oliver Williams of Sheridan, warned that the council might be blamed if taxes should be hiked to carry out the recommended program. The representatives of the Arkansas Bus and Truck association and the oil and gas dealers also lifted their voices in opposition to the plan.

$20,000 FIRE LOSS
Eureka Springs, Sept. 2 —(P)—Three buildings and a quantity of lumber were destroyed by fire which swept the Bullock Lumber company here yesterday afternoon. The loss was estimated unofficially at $20,000.

DOROTHY DIX Propinquity Matchmaking

A study that has recently been made of 5000 marriage licenses reveals that by far the largest percentage of applicants were neighbors or near-neighbors.
Thus do we have it proved to us once more that propinquity is the greatest matchmaker in the world and that all that you have to do is to throw the average boy and girl together and they will fall in love with each other. Or think they are in love, which amounts to the same thing matrimonially speaking.

The power of daily association, of habit, is so potent in drawing people together that I often wonder that parents ever permit a boy or girl to come into their homes whom they would not be willing for their son or daughter to marry. Yet they do, and the results are innumerable tragedies of marriages that never would have taken place except that two inflammable young creatures were brought into daily contact at a time of life when they were in love with love.

How many cases of the kind we all recall. The A's, who took into their home a handsome and fascinating young nephew addicted to drink and then were so horrified and amazed when Mamie insisted on throwing herself away on a drunkard. The B's, who always took a poetical, temperamental lad who had never even earned his own cigarette money with them to their summer camp and were so shocked with Betty's eloping with the ne'er-do-well. The C's, who used to let Cousin Sally send her silly, frivolous, brainless, selfish and extravagant little flapper daughter down to spend interminable visits with them and who broke her heart when she actually found the son tied himself up with her for life. The D's, who had fits when their talented boy, for whom they were so ambitious, got kidnapped by one of Mammy's friends, who persuaded him that years did not count and that her

Easy to Play New Card Game Canasta

By William E. McKenney
The laws of four-handed Canasta call for two regular decks of 52 cards each, plus four jokers. In cutting for partners and seats, the ace ranks high and the deuce low. If a player draws a joker, he puts it to one side and draws another card.
The player on the right of the dealer shuffles the pack. The player on the left of the dealer must cut the cards. Tables are arranged as in bridge, by selection of partners or by cutting for partner.
The cards are dealt to each player one at a time. After each player has received 11 cards, the deck is placed on the table, preferably in a box or tray, and becomes the stock pile. The top card of the stock pile is turned over and placed in another box or tray, and this pile is referred to as the pack, or discard pile.

If the up-card is a joker, deuce or red trey, it is removed from the box or tray and slid under the edge of the box or tray so that it is visible to all players, and again the top card of the stock pile is turned face up and put in the other box or tray.
If another joker, deuce or red trey is turned up, the next card from the stock pile is turned over to cover it, and this process is continued until some card other than a joker, deuce or red trey is turned up.

The joker, deuce or red trey that has been slid under the edge of the box containing the pack signifies that the pack is frozen. The ordinary rules applying to bridge and other card games for dealing hold true in Canasta. After the deal has been completed, play is ready to start.
The play consists of three parts: one, the draw; two, the meld (optional); three, the discard.

When it is a player's first turn to play, the first thing he must do is to remove the red treys from his hand and place them face up on the table. He is entitled to another card from the stock pile for each red trey he puts on the table.

If one of the cards he draws from the stock pile is a red trey, he must put that on the table and draw another card, so that at the start of the play he has 11 cards in his hand without any red treys. The player at the left of the dealer begins the play by drawing the top card of the stock pile or the up-card. If the up-card of the pack is a black trey, even though you have two more black treys in your hand, you are required to draw from the stock pile.

Tomorrow: More on four-handed play.

The Story: Although Gaynel Teale's marriage to the wealthy Barry Bainbridge of Detroit would solve many problems that beset her as breadwinner for a family of four, including herself, her brother and sister and mother, Gaynel is in love with Fritz Freyman who is not wealthy. She admits she is in love with Fritz and not in love with Barry. But she asks, how can they get married when Fritz can't support a family. "We'll work it out some way together," says Fritz. Gaynel is not afraid any more and they set out for a lunch room for hamburgers.

The hamburgers were all that Fritz had said they would be. They came in the little lunch room, topped with pickle relish and onion.

Gaynel liked onions, but they did not like her. Nevertheless she took such a huge bite that she choked, so that Fritz had to thump her on the back and summon the proprietor for a glass of water.

"This is her first square meal in three weeks," he explained gravely to the fat proprietor. "You see, we have been trying to live on love. That's why the lady tried to make a meal out of one bite. Did you ever try living on love? Say, before you . . . er . . . acquired your present . . . er . . . position, Joe?"

"Stantissios," the proprietor corrected his gravity matching Fritz's. "Sure, I lift on left once. When I first comes to dis country, wid Marie and our five little ones, also wid us. Loff," gravity rose, now to such heights supreme that all the chins shook in added emphasis, "it is de greatest ting in de whole world, loff is. Ain't it so, yes? In de whole world der is nothings like loff, no?"

"No. Yes, Fritz said," shaking his one chin decorously. He turned on Gaynel, perched on the high stool next to him; his grin was triumphant. "You see! he crowed. "Think of it. Love fed five — no, seven hungry mouths, just like that! Now will you stop looking for trouble, my sweet? put your trust in me and the Statue of Liberty."

"You are very much obliged, yes, or like, maybe, another slice of onion?"

Gaynel almost choked once more as he went on. "Onion and the garlic, she keep our five little ones fat and healthy like me."

"I'll have another slice, Mr. Stand-in-house," Fritz said.

"Stantissios," the second correction came with greater dignity. "Onion she keeps the germs away. 'Not for me!' Gaynel broke in hastily.

"Here he is!" Mr. Stantissios presented the onion on the tip of a long knife. "Helps yourself. And thank you. Comes again?"

"Thank you," Fritz said, helping himself generously. "We'll come again, all right. When we have our five little ones we'll bring them along."

"What a man you are," said Gaynel, after they were seated on a bench once more, her head on his shoulder because now it was dark, and there were no rubber-necks or people, and the night air was so soft and sweet and she wished this could last forever.

"I knew you were a perfectly lald eyes on you," she said. Then sighed, "I guess that's why I love you."

He said, "That's a good enough reason. But you're the outrageous one, really. Talking nonsense about not seeing how we can get married, saying you'll leave me if I gain any weight, putting me off whenever I try to pin you down." His arm tightened around her; he drew her closer to him; his lips brushed the waves of her hair.

She said, "You're forgetting we decided there were certain matters we'd have to work out first."

"Why not get married first, then work out afterwards?"

"You sound as though you'd be afraid you'd lose me if we wait awhile!"

"You're darn tootin' I'm afraid! I told you that you're the only thing I am afraid of, my love. Your mother might persuade you to take Barry on, after all. So that he family could go on eating their cake and keeping it, too."

"You might marry Bessie," Gaynel said. "She's after you, my lad."

She did not want to face those other facts just now: that she must tell the family and Barry about Fritz.

"Bessie? Why, I didn't even remember who she was the first time she rang me up." So, Bessie had done the pursuing then! "Not that I don't admire her gold freckles," Fritz added, with his grin. "In fact, her freckles are one of my few weaknesses. If you don't snap me up quick, Bessie might get me on the rebound."

"Over my dead body," Gaynel said.

It was enough just to be together. They did not talk for awhile, so close, with only the harvest moon, solemn and round and golden, for company.

"My thing for you to do," Fritz said finally, "is to have it. You family. Tell them they'll have to come down to earth, give up the cake, balance the budget. You admit they could get along without your help, if they would. Couldn't they for example, give you that 24-room shack and move into closer quarters? Can't your brother buckle down to taking a job seriously? Even Pat, it seems to me, should be trained for something definite so that in time she can contribute her share. You've had it all for five long years. Time to shuffle the cards, I'd say. It's been done before. Why not bring it home, Gorgeous?"

"You're big enough. If I could do it, for you, if there is any way I can help, you know I will."

"It's my problem. I'll do it, if he's here alone. He had made it himself that one decision must be yours," Gaynel said. She had told

Identify Plane Which Nearly Sank Boat

New Bedford, Mass., Sept. 3 —(UP)—The "mystery plane" which strafed and nearly sank a New Bedford fishing boat was a light-craft of the Connecticut Air National guard, it was disclosed today.

Maj. Carl Jansen, intelligence officer for the guard's 103rd fighter squadron at Groton, Conn., said that seven of the squadron's planes were over No Man's Land island yesterday, firing live ammunition.

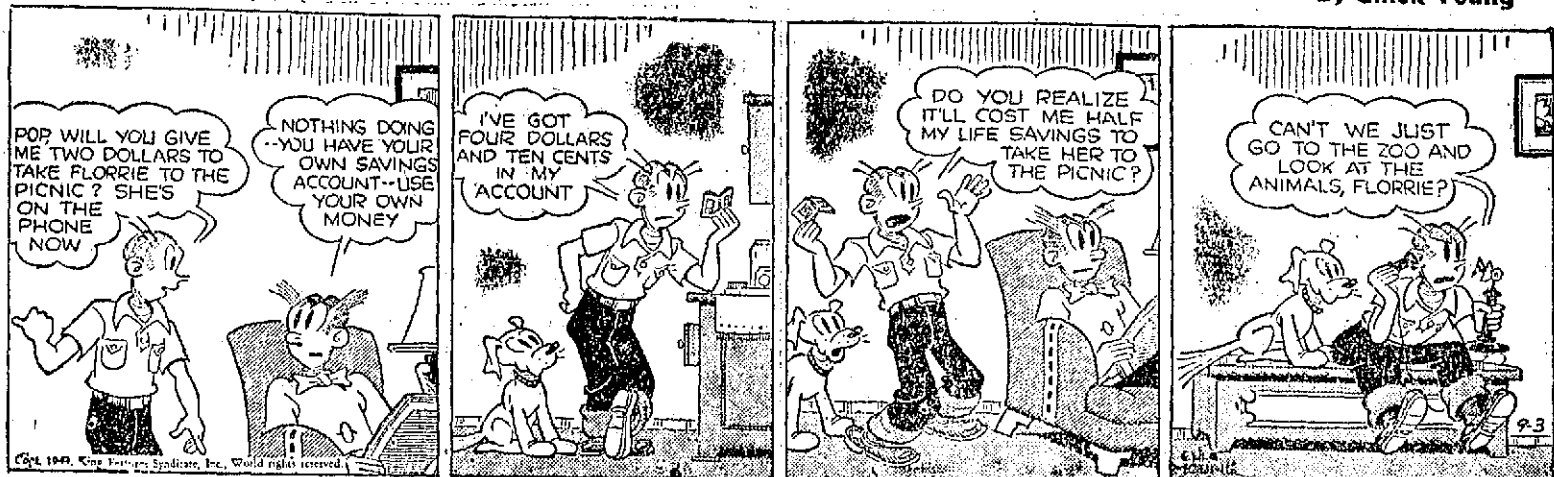

This was about the time some 20 slugs peppered the fishing boat the Sharker I, which was tied to a wharf at the island, five miles south of Martha's Vineyard.

Capt. Lee Broderick, 42, skipper of the craft, said that he and his two-man crew would have been killed if they had not leaped to safety. Broderick and Ellis Henry, 25, landed on the wharf, Louis Olin, 22, jumped into the sea.

The bullets put the vessel's radio out of commission, punctured her fuel line and cut through her metal hull. Many of the holes were below the water line and Broderick said the 36-foot craft would have sunk if he hadn't had excellent pumps aboard.

Maj. Jansen quoted the leader of the flight of F-47 Thunderbolts as saying that he had made two passes at the island, a military firing area, when he saw a small mast sticking up above the navy wharf.
